FREE WORKSHEET

Give what you already know a name

Fill this in once and you walk away with a named framework and a LinkedIn post built around it.

Step 1 Pick the one thing

Step 2 Give it a name

Step 3 Break it into numbered steps

Step 4 Make the post prove itself

MAAZ BIN YOUSAF

BEFORE YOU START

The packaging is the product

I started studying how creators like Lara Acosta write their posts, and one thing kept bugging me.

The ones getting DMs from potential clients weren't saying anything new. They had the same tips and the same ideas as everybody else in the feed. What they did differently was package them. The tip had a name, it came in numbered steps, and the post itself showed the thing working.

So I turned that into a worksheet you can fill in with a pen. Here's the difference it makes, using advice you've heard a hundred times.

BEFORE

"Start broad, then get specific."

That's writing 101. You'd nod at it and keep scrolling, and so would your next client.

AFTER

The Funnel Framework

1. Open wide
2. Narrow it down
3. Land on one point

It's the same advice in both boxes. The second one just reads like a system somebody built, and that's the one people message you about.

What you'll have when you finish

A name for something you already do well, three numbered steps under it, and a post draft where the reader watches it work.

STEP 1 OF 4

Pick the one thing

You already know it. That's exactly why it feels too obvious to post.

Answer these quickly and don't tidy them up. Nobody else is reading this page.

What do clients or colleagues ask me again and again?

What do I fix in other people's work without even thinking about it?

What advice have I repeated at least three times this month?

What did I learn the hard way that I now do on autopilot?

MY ONE THING

Circle the answer you could explain half asleep, then write it here the way you'd say it to a friend.

If it looks boring written down, you picked right. "Start broad, then get specific" looks boring too.

STEP 2 OF 4

Give it a name

A name is what makes it feel like yours, and people only ask about things they can call something.

You don't have to be clever here. These four patterns cover most of the good names you see on LinkedIn.

NAME IT AFTER	THE PLAIN ADVICE	THE NAME
A shape	Start broad, then get specific	The Funnel Framework
A number	Keep your opening to three short lines	The 3-Line Rule
An action	Read what they posted before you message them	The Look-First Method
A contrast	Write the draft fast, edit it the next day	Hot Draft, Cold Edit

Five names for my one thing

Write all five even if the first one feels right. The fourth is usually better.

Run your favourite through this

- [ ] It's two to four words long
- [ ] I can say it out loud on a call without wincing
- [ ] It hints at what the thing actually does
- [ ] I searched it on LinkedIn and nobody in my niche is already using it

MY NAME

STEP 3 OF 4

Break it into numbered steps

Even simple advice starts to feel like a system once it has numbers on it.

Three steps is plenty, and I wouldn't go past five. Start each step with a verb so the reader knows what to do, and make step one something they could try today.

The Funnel Framework, broken down

1. Open wide. Start with the thing everyone in the room already agrees on.
2. Narrow it down. Bring it to one situation the reader has actually been in.
3. Land on one point. Finish on a single thing they can go and do.

Now mine

1

STEP NAME (START WITH A VERB)

WHAT THEY ACTUALLY DO

2

STEP NAME (START WITH A VERB)

3

STEP NAME (START WITH A VERB)

WHAT THEY ACTUALLY DO

STEP 4 OF 4

Make the post prove itself

This is the step most people skip, and it's the one that gets the DM.

Your post should use the framework on the reader while they're reading it. If your framework is about hooks, the first line has to hook them. If it's about packaging, the post has to be packaged. By the last line they've already felt it work, so you never have to tell them it does.

Where in my post will the reader watch my framework working?

My post, line by line

WHAT I NOTICED (A REAL MOMENT)

THE THING EVERYONE ALREADY KNOWS

WHY THAT ALONE GETS IGNORED

THE NAME

STEP 1

STEP 2

STEP 3

ONE LINE THAT SUMS IT UP

A QUESTION THEY CAN ANSWER IN A SENTENCE

Open with something that happened to you. "I noticed something weird when..." pulls people in further than any tip does.

LAST PAGE

Before you hit post

Read the draft out loud once, then go down this list with a pen.

- [ ] My framework has a name and the name shows up in the post
- [ ] The steps are numbered and each one starts with a verb
- [ ] The post shows the framework working on the reader
- [ ] My first line is something that happened to me
- [ ] Every sentence follows on from the one before it
- [ ] It sounds like me talking to a friend when I read it out loud
- [ ] The last line is a question somebody can answer in one sentence

If you're stuck on the name

Go back to Step 2 and try a different pattern. If you named it after a shape, try a number. I'd post a plain name this week before I'd wait a month for a perfect one.

Now go and post it.

Then send me the name on LinkedIn. I'd like to see what you came up with.
